That all comes crashing down when she, along with the women she manages; Mags, Lexi Steph, get made redundant. She s screwed. In hindsight she shouldn t have attacked her colleague in a moment of rage. There goes the reference. When they all bump into each other a few months later at the job centre Sadie finds she s not the only one in a hole. Steph s boyfriend has left her holding the baby, Lexi s stuck in an abusive relationship and poor Mags has breast cancer. They re all struggling to keep on top of their bills. They all need money to get out of their situations, its as simple as that. Mags mentions that some women find marijuana helps ease the sickness caused by chemo. With the desperation mounting and the coffee spurring them on they somehow decide to start growing it. They re only going to sell to ladies going through chemo, so its not too bad, right? They re not going to be proper drug dealers. And its only temporary. They didn t bet on the business taking off so well though. Before they know it they ve got orders coming out of their ears, a sexy detective on their trail, suspicious neighbours and drug dealers angry they re working on their patch. Can Sadie pull them out of this dangerous world they ve found themselves in? And can she do it before they end up in prison?.
