Dordt College Press, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.CHRISTIANITY AND LEISURE VOLUME II provides indispensable reading for leisure researchers who study leisure, for recreation practitioners who provide recreation services, and for all Christians as they incorporate leisure into their own lives. It is organized into five sections. Leisure Theory How do we conceptualize leisure? is a perennial question in the leisure studies field and one that Christians need to consider. While Christian reflections on leisure have tended to focus on the classical and activity views, classical, social psychological state of mind, and holistic views are included in this section as well as an historical essay on how American Puritan Sabbatarians were visionary innovators of modern leisure time. Empirical Research Although Christians throughout history have reflected upon leisure, and how to understand it from a Christian perspective, there has been little empirical research on how Christians define and practice leisure. The largest section of this second volume consists of research on topics such as leisure meanings, leisure constraints, wilderness programs, leisure and spirituality, as well as retreats. This group of empirical papers is probably the largest concentration of social scientific research on Christianity and leisure published in one place. Ethical and Applied Issues How shall we then live? is always an important question for Christians as they wrestle with how to implement biblical principles in recreation, leisure, and play. Christian perspectives on the ethics and practice of leisure in general, as well as in specific contexts such as play, risk-taking activities, and recreation programming are explored. Therapeutic Recreation Therapeutic recreation is a rapidly expanding subfield of recreation and leisure service delivery. While the worldview or beliefs and values of the therapist are not often considered, this section addresses some of these factors...
