Daniel Lopez Investigations. Paperback. Condition: New. 256 pages. Dimensions: 11.0in. x 8.5in. x 0.6in. This 2nd Edition printed book (Nov. 2016) is an expanded and updated print version of my 1st Edition book of March 2013 (as well as my digitized Amazon. com e-book version, also of March 2013). This 2nd Edition book provides an historical, social, economic and geographical analysis (refer to Puerto Rico's August 1899 devastating hurricane which greatly adversely affected its economy, its agriculture and its population) which then created the conditions for immigration, en masse, from Puerto Rico (AKA: Porto Rico from 1898 to 1932) to California (1850-1925), as well as to the then Hawaiian Territory (from December 23, 1900-1925). The Puerto Rican diaspora to the United States, as well as to Hawaii, are partially attributed to Hawaii's long-lasting historical need for cheap labor. Puerto Rico's immigration history is briefly compared to the different European Ethnic Groups which were also recruited by the Hawaiian Sugar Industry personnel to also work in the Hawaii sugar cane fields, as well. This 2nd Edition consists of 256 pages, and has a comprehensive and detailed Topical Index, an Epilogue, in addition to having 27 other Chapters. It has a total of 423 Bibliographic Sources, many of which are Primary Sources. It also has 32 Exhibits (i. e. , photos, copies of Census pages from the 1852 State of California Census, the 1860, 1870 and 1900, and the 1920 U. S. Federal Census, as well). Several photos from 1890s life in Puerto Rico (under the Spanish colonial rule), as well as photos from the December 15, 1900 issue of the San Francisco Examiner newspaper are also provided. Additionally, this book has two demographic population Tables/Charts which provides the Puerto Rican population figures in 1900, 1910, 1920 and for 2000, for selective cities...
