Excerpt from The Accounting System of the United States From 1789 to 1910 The arrangement of the accounting branch of the Treasury Department, in 1837, may be summarized thus: The First Comptroller was not only an accounting officer, examining the settlements of the First and Fifth Auditors and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but he superintended the customs. The Second Comptroller was engaged upon duties appertaining to an accounting officer, examining settlements made by the Second, Third, and Fourth Auditors. The Commissioner of the Land Office managed the public lands and adjusted the accounts of the receivers of public moneys who sold the lands. The Fifth Auditor, besides adjusting the accounts mentioned, superintended the Lighthouse Establishment. The Fourth and Sixth Auditors were exclusively confined to the naval and postal departments. The Second and Third Auditors adjusted the accounts of the War Department. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
