Excerpt from Certain Way to Save Our Country: And Make Us a More Happy and Flourishing People, Than at Any Former Period of Our History To renew the former system of corruption; to bestow on ignorance, profligacy, and venality, the rewards due only to virtue, industry, and talent; and, in a word, to tread again the same path, that has led us to the verge of ruin, would be to seal, irrevocably, the destinies of the empire: By our acquiescence in such a criminal procedure, we should deservedly expire as a nation, without even the meagre consolation of pity or compassion. Let it be remembered, that our country is the first link in the great chain that supports the commercial and general interests of Europe, and, that as an entire alteration has been effected throughout the continent, it necessarily follows, that a system of policy, widely different from the present, must be adopted in Great Britain. The neighbouring nations have mostly been humbled into obedience, or effectually subdued, and we are now left without an ally, to combat, single-handed, a powerful...
